Asheboro High Students Given 'Open Lunch' By School Board

By BOB WILLIAMS

Representatives of the Asheboro High School Student Council Thursday night convinced the Asheboro Board of Education to adopt a policy allowing students to leave campus during lunch hours.

Immediately after the student contingent led by student body president Bruce Voncannon made its presentation for an "open campus," school board member Henry Armfield moved that the present policies concerning lunch be revised.

"When these kids leave next year to attend a university, they will have very few restrictions about where they can go and what they can do, and I say put the responsibility on them now," Armfield said.

"These are also the same kids who will be electing the school board next time around. If they can be sent to Vietnam, they can certainly be allowed to have a free hour for lunch," Armfield added.

Armfield's motion was, after some discussion and revision, adopted unanimously. The approved motion revised current "closed" lunch policy to allow students with parental permission to leave the school campus during lunch hour.

The new policy is effective immediately, it was noted, and will be put into operation "as soon as feasible." Schools Supt. Guy B. Teachey pointed out that current scholastic insurance only covers students while traveling to and from school in the morning and afternoon and while on the school grounds during the day. It was explained that the schools would not be responsible for any student hurt while away from school during lunch.

Armfield moved that the open lunch policy be put into operation "immediately," but the adopted motion provides for operation "as soon as possible."

AHS's RALPH ALEXANDER PRESENTS OPEN LUNCH PROPOSAL

"You could stall this thing the rest of the year if you want," Armfield told Teachey, "and I don't plan to let that happen."

Student president Voncannon, who along with Ellen Henson and Ralph Alexander presented the proposal, said student government associations at Asheboro High have been working toward open lunches for four years.

After thorough study of the situation here and at other schools which have open lunches, Alexander said parents of the students were surveyed.

The survey results showed that 62 percent of the parents who answered questionnaires favored an open lunch policy, while 38 percent did not favor the idea.

After the new policy was adopted, Voncannon was elated.

"I hope you won't think this is bush league of me," he told the board members. "But I could kiss everyone of you."
